We all have to live in a world full of contradictions, widespread uncertainty and widely encouraged self-doubt. Everyone around us seems to believe that individually humans are nothing unless banded together as a majority with a leader. Because of that insidious belief each of us is left to feel that we must be wrong if we disregard majority beliefs and choose our own paths to follow. Sooner or later disenchantment with the majority and its leaders, or some event in our personal life, triggers something inside us and firmly sets us upon our individual path. The path gradually leads us far away from majority thought, and teaches us more and more to value ourselves as unique and priceless individuals. When we step onto the path it changes us so that there is no going back to what we were previously. But as we take that first step we have no idea where the path will lead us. First the years and then the decades pass us by, and by then with hard experience we have learnt to separate golden wheat from a great deal of useless chaff. Also by then by our own efforts we have discovered the destination to which the path will lead us. The most important rule of all is simplicity because the path will lead you in your own timing through a world of profound knowledge and thought. Because it is profound many seekers become confused and become locked in by their own complicated interpretations of that knowledge. Often they will then teach those interpretations to other seekers. If you examine the inside of a wristwatch you will see a mechanism with many intricate parts. Only when you look more closely do you realise that each of those many parts has a simple function. Keep it simple because one day you will have to teach new seekers who have just stepped onto the path. This is your freely chosen path, and you have now left all majorities and their judgements behind you.
